Thoughts from Sherm Bloomer –

Basic message received by Christina DeWitt was:

We have always had a graduate tuition plateau of 9-16 credits. That is graduate students pay per credit up till 9 credits.

Ecampus was developed with a focus on undergraduates not graduate students. Undergraduate students are charged for whatever credit they took. Therefore, the only way to “re-mit” tuition for Ecampus courses is if the courses are paid for using University Funds.

The way the system is supposed to work is graduate students are first charged tuition. Then, the tuition is paid back as an expense by either the researcher supporting the student or the department. Part of the confusion for students is seeing this charge. The issue for researchers is not being able to take this tuition charge into account when writing grant proposals.
