5. Update of LBCC/OSU conversation regarding suspended students - Jeff Malone

- Rick DeBellis, Jeff Malone, Tyler deAdder, Michele McAllister and LBCC's Danny Aynes and Katie Windner met to discuss the new LBCC policy and how it will affect OSU students who are suspended.
- Essentially, LBCC will not admit suspended students, because they do not meet the admission application deadline. This is a student success initiative. It is data driven in that LBCC has determined that students who start the first week of the term, often struggle and perform poorly there. The new reality for advisors and suspended students is that once they are suspended, they will most likely need to sit out a term and then take the following two terms to earn their 24 transferrable new college credits.
- One solution was to encourage students on probation to become dual enrolled at LBCC. New language will become embedded in the probation letter.
- Once students are officially DPP, they could work with Angie Klampe from LBCC to navigate the transition at LBCC.
- Willamette Valley Housing Commission may be helpful in dealing with housing issues.
- Non-degree status can still be a possibility for up to 5 credits.
- This policy will become commonplace at rest of Oregon community colleges as well.
- DPP could be considered by ASC when making recommendations while going through reinstatement process.
- The Registrar said that Jeff Malone "can have whatever he wants".
- The DPP website will need to be updated to reflect policy change.
